

One of the funny things of the first night was enacted before the curtain, for of course there were no funny things behind it. It seems that a bunch of young and lively girls decided at the last moment to secure a chaperone and go upwards to hear the music. The sedate but by no means elderly parents of the girls, who were, of course, not to be seen, were seated themselves in the dress circle and gazed around a little, it occurred to them to glance cautiously upward and "rubber" a little for the daughter of the house. Presently he saw the row of girls, but could not get the eye of his own offspring, and continued to gaze. Although he failed, following the first and second act, to secure attention from his own, he was not without much attention from another maiden, not with the party, and it began to dawn on him that he was suspected of casting eyes where they were not desired. A moment later a buxom matron leaned over and, looking directly at him, glowed as if to say: "You quit looking at my daughter!" Turning in desperation to the wife of his bosom, he said: "For the Lord's sake, dear, you look for her. That's up there has set her mother onto me."

Brides and visitors have been the special attractions in town the past week. One hardly knows which has been the more popular.

A very well defined rumor is going the rounds, that one of the most active of former politicians is about to enter the hitherto untrodden state of matrimony. As soon as he has finished his prayers he will turn his attention to the matter in hand and lead a fair one on the coast to the altar.

Mrs. C. E. Ward, formerly Miss Lily Barnes of this city, has been receiving much social attention during the week of her stay in the city. Mrs. Ward had been at a rather long having spent her girlhood in the city.

"What's your baby doing about this matter, anyway? Playing fast and loose?"

"He doesn't need to play either. He's both."

Well, when a busy man spends every afternoon making a call at the same house it does begin to look interesting. But it may indicate only philanthropy.

A great many parties are already made up to attend the concert in the amphitheater Tuesday evening, and judging by the preparations already made the big edifice will see the best dressed audience it has ever held. It is declared that the plan of the evening is to have a chaffing dish of good clothes are so limited, but perhaps in this case the cause will be great enough to justify the clothes whether they are to be seen or not.

And speaking of clothes, what a disappointment in this line the first night of grand opera was! Every woman seemed to have waited to see what someone else was to wear, and the consequence was that the least dressy audience ever seen at a first night of a good show. Shirts, waists, of the everyday variety, too, seemed to be the favorites, and the only ones who were seen to wear anything in keeping with the production or even with their own station.

A great many of the girls at the opera Wednesday night thought that the stuff on the east side had a rather lovely look, but they did not appreciate the lengthiness as the men who occupied it did.

Ethel—What would you do if you should lose your husband and suddenly become a widow?

Mabel—Oh, dear me, I'd pine. What would you do?

Ethel—I think I'd spruce.

The late innovation at the University club will be appreciated by the members. The plan of having a chaffing dish or two handy is a good one and will be sure to win approval. When the "good old" plan of having a chaffing dish or two handy is a good one and will be sure to win approval. When the "good old" plan of having a chaffing dish or two handy is a good one and will be sure to win approval.

CURRENT EVENTS IN LOCAL SOCIAL CIRCLES

Mrs. John Stuart Manley entertained at a dinner Friday evening in compliment to two of the young brides of the spring season. The decorations were unique, the color scheme being white and green. The broad white sash worn by the hostess as a bride hung in bows from the chandelier, and rice was strewn over the cloth and the floor. Cupids were suspended above the table, and hearts were outlined in every space. The refreshments were all in heart shapes and the place cards carried out the same idea.
